Getting Here

- Getting to and from Ketchikan can be a challenge. We are part of the “Milk Run.” When booking your flight please be aware that if you are coming through Juneau, you are likely going to be touring Southeast. Northern Chapters, you might want to consider flying to Seattle and flying directly into Ketchikan if you do not enjoying the “up and down” part of flying.
- We do have rental car facilities in Ketchikan, but we don’t expect that many of you will need a rental car. Ketchikan is extremely small, Cape Fox is located within walking distance of downtown. Cape Fox will provide a shuttle to and from the airport.
- There is one Lyft driver, one Uber driver, and a variety of taxi services in Ketchikan, and Epsilon members are willing to drive our DKG sisters as needed.

The Ferry

- The Ketchikan Airport is actually on Gravina Island. This means you will need to take the airport ferry to cross the water to get here. The ferry is located just outside of the airport, follow the walkways toward the water. The ferry fee is $6 a person, they accept cards or cash. On your return trip, you will pay at the same station on the airport side. The ferry departs the airport side on the hour and half hours. The ferry ride is approximately 3 minutes long. The Cape Fox shuttle will be waiting at the top of the ferry terminal ramp.

What to Expect

- Ketchikan's weather can be unpredictable in April. Consider possible flight delays when you book your flight. (Our weather has been unusually nice this year, but we don't know what spring will bring.)
- Standard Ketchikan attire is raincoats and xtratuf boots. We've had snowy Aprils, windy Aprils, rainy Aprils, and Aprils that fool you into thinking it's summer. Please check the weather the week before you come here for a better idea of how to pack.
